

IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATION

Even though India gained its independence back in 1947, outsiders have still been sucking it of its resources. Regardless, Indian people have the mentality that it's great how famous companies are building manufacturing units in India, not once going back to review their mindset and thinking that they are using the place to benefit off of it, not to develop the country. The media also supports these types of actions, under the name of the development of the country, even though it is the responsibility of the media to properly inform the viewer about a topic. However, we can't solely blame the media for doing this, it is only because this is what the viewers want to hear that the media is doing it. Similarly, the government does only what the public wants the government to do, as the public helps them remain in power.

So it all comes down to the public to decide what should happen in the country, and how people behave is dependent on their education. The quality of education indirectly creates and affects the roots of the functioning of the entire country. This means that if proper education that encourages imagination and rethinking, instead of blind following and complete obedience is given in the country, people will have a much better idea of what to expect or demand from the government. Spreading awareness for issues like these is key to helping out in making people realize the real value of development.

-Arnav Jaiswal